Sculpture class has been creating luminaries, a project that was centered around designing three-dimensional geometric shapes out of clay that represented them on a personal level. "I choose designs that represented my life's journey so far. The three places I've lived mean a lot to me and I wanted them to shine in this project," senior Megan Mersino said.

Marist recognizes student athletes and classes compete in dodgeball

By Jason DePaoli

Gathering to celebrate the athletes who competed last spring, this fall, and who are currently competing this winter, the Marist community enjoyed the annual Winter Pep Assembly this Wednesday in the gym.

At the beginning of the assembly, the co-presidents of the Environmental Club, juniors Maria Alcazar and Maddie White, provided important information regarding the new compost bins that Marist will have soon. The two mentioned that this is another way Marist is trying to "go green," and combat climate change.

Director of Athletics and Facilities, Rick Gardner, invited all of the athletes onto the gym floor in order to properly recognize them for all of their hard work and dedication to their sport.

After the conclusion of the athletic recognition, two members from the theatre department, Brandon Foster and Corrie Patton, performed a preview of their show to entice the school into attending the winter play.

With the completion of the announcements and recognitions, the Marist Student Council prepared two different games for the student body to participate in. The first competition had the freshmen pitted against the seniors in an aggressive round of "Hungry Hungry Hippos." Students laid on a board holding a laundry basket and were pushed into the center of the gym by their partner in order to gather as many dodge balls as possible.

After a round that was dominated by the seniors, the school, as a whole, decided to move onto dodgeball, a year after year crowd favorite. After multiple competitions with the classes pitted against each other, the seniors came out victorious and defeated the second place juniors.

2022 Tours Marist

By Harper Kast

Last Saturday, student ambassadors, coaches, musicians, athletes, staff and administration welcomed the class of 2022 to campus to show off all that Marist has to offer to students and their families.

During the tours, excited student ambassadors, club members and athletes answered many questions, gave information, and shared personal experiences about their individual sport or club. "I answered any questions incoming freshmen or their families had about being a student athlete, especially in track & field," sophomore Georgia Karam said.

Athletic teams, music groups, clubs, and academic organizations all had booths where incoming freshmen could sign up to get information on the sports or activities that they are interested in joining next year. "I signed up for soccer, track, and cross country. I enjoyed Preview day and it was nice to have the high

Celebrating the 12th Day of Christmas

By Liesl Benda

In honor of the feast of the Epiphany, students and staff gathered in the gym last Thursday for Mass, which was celebrated by Father Theo Lange.

As one of the oldest Christmas celebrations, the Epiphany traces all the way back to the end of the second century.

It commemorates the first two events that affirmed Jesus' divinity: when the three kings visited the baby Jesus, and when Jesus was baptized in the River Jordan. The Catholic Church stresses the visit of the Magi in the celebration of the Epiphany.

To close the Mass, Biology teacher Pat Wagner and English teacher Beth Wirth came forward to present the staff's hopes for the Marist student body. Some of the hopes included that students would know they "are enough, that [they] are worthy and [they] are loved," and that they "find balance in life and peace of heart."

Marist history teacher Jon Nuxoll won the award for the Smart/Maher Veterans of Foreign Wars National Citizen Education Teacher Award for the Eugene area.

Last fall, Nuxoll was nominated by the Marist administration for being a stellar example of what a citizen should look like, alongside with his service to his students.

Nuxoll advanced and has the potential to win the award for the local VFW district and advance even further. He received his award on Dec. 14 with winners of other awards.
